Course Description. This training will give participants the knowledge to be able to structure the mediation process to enable parties to create successful, efficient parenting plans. Upon completion of this training, participants will be able to discuss how structure decreases anxiety; identify the parenting priorities of parties; outline techniques relating to parenting plans that can be used in the mediation process to address special cases such as alienation, contact resistance, special needs, relocation, parenting partners, and list guidelines for successful parenting plans.

Faculty: Benjamin D. Garber, Ph.D. is a New Hampshire licensed psychologist, a former guardian ad litem, and a parenting coordinator.

Dr. Garber has advanced degrees in child and family development, clinical psychology, and psycholinguistics from the Pennsylvania State University and the University of Michigan. He has lived and worked in New Hampshire since 1988, opening his present practice in clinical child, family, forensic, and consulting psychology in 1999.

When not engaged in professional activities or involved with family matters, Dr. Garber can often be found kayaking and fishing on the remote lakes and rivers of Northern New England and occasionally scuba diving in warmer waters to the south.

Dr. Garber is a nationally renowned speaker, researcher, and an award-winning freelance journalist, writing in the areas of child and family development for popular press publications appearing around the world and in juried professional publications in both law and psychologist. A list of publications can be found at: www.healthyparent.com.
