Barnhart Law Office LLC, and Robert B. Barnhart, for appellant.

APPEAL from the Franklin County Court of Common Pleas.

BROWN, P.J.

{¶ 1} Defendant-appellant, F.R., appeals from a judgment of conviction and sentence entered by the Franklin County Court of Common Pleas pursuant to a jury verdict finding him guilty of two counts of gross sexual imposition.

{¶ 2} Appellant was indicted on three counts of gross sexual imposition, in violation of R.C. 2907.05(A)(4), arising from his alleged sexual conduct with an 11-year-old girl, K.S. The crimes were charged as third-degree felonies because they involved a victim less than 13 years of age. R.C. 2907.05(C)(2).

{¶ 3} Following a trial, a jury returned guilty verdicts on Counts 1 and 3 and a not guilty verdict on Count 2. Thereafter, the trial court issued a judgment entry consistent with the jury's verdicts, classified appellant a Tier II Sex Offender, and sentenced him to 36 months imprisonment and 5 years of post-release control. Appellant appeals the judgment, asserting the following three assignments of error:

1. The trial court erred when it permitted multiple witnesses to recount the victim's out-of-court statements about the event over hearsay objection from defense counsel.
2. The trial court erred when it allowed the State to elicit victim-impact evidence during the trial.
3. The cumulative impact of the trial court's errors warrants reversal.

{¶ 4} Evidence presented by the parties pertinent to the issues raised in this appeal establishes the following. K.S., the 11-year-old daughter of D.S., was best friends with A.R., the nine-year-old daughter of M.R. and appellant, and the two girls often had sleepovers at each other's houses. Although M.R. and appellant were divorced, appellant often visited A.R. at M.R.'s house. K.S. had a good relationship with appellant and M.R., and thought of them as her second parents.

{¶ 5} On Saturday, April 13, 2013, K.S. spent the night with A.R. at M.R.'s house. Because M.R. had to work that evening, she arranged for a friend to babysit the girls. K.S. testified that she and A.R. were playing with their dolls while they took a bath together. Appellant knocked on the bathroom door and told the girls it was time to get out of the bathtub. K.S. wrapped a towel around her body and walked across the hall to A.R.'s room to get dressed. A.R. remained in the bathroom to drain the bathtub and dry off the dolls. Appellant followed K.S. into A.R.'s bedroom and gave K.S. "a friendly side hug." (Tr. Vol. II, 134.) As he did so, he squeezed her right breast. Appellant then pinched her on the bottom over the towel, lifted the towel and slapped her on the bottom, pulled out his cell phone, motioned for her to take off her towel, and then said, "[d]on't worry. I won't tell nobody." (Tr. Vol. II, 135.) K.S. covered her face with her sleepover bag and saw a cell phone camera flash. Appellant then left A.R.'s room, stopped briefly in the bathroom to say goodbye to A.R., and left the house. Moments later, A.R. entered the bedroom. K.S. immediately told A.R. what appellant had done to her. Shortly thereafter, K.S. received several text messages from appellant making fun of her boyfriend. K.S. did not tell the babysitter what had happened with appellant because she did not know her very well. Although she knew she would have to tell her parents about the incident the next day, she tried to forget about it and enjoy the rest of the sleepover.

{¶ 6} K.S. went home about 9:00 a.m. the next morning. At approximately 5:00 p.m. that evening, she told D.S. she needed to tell her something about appellant. According to D.S., K.S. related that she and A.R. were in the bathroom taking a bath around 9:00 p.m. the preceding night. K.S. did not take her pajamas into the bathroom with her; instead, she planned to put her pajamas on in A.R.'s bedroom. K.S. got out of the bathtub, wrapped herself in a towel, and opened the bathroom door. Appellant followed her into A.R.'s bedroom and, when he reached toward her to give her a hug, he grabbed her right breast, patted or pinched her bottom over the towel, and then flipped the towel up and slapped her on the bare bottom. Appellant then motioned for K.S. to drop her towel, pulled out his cell phone, and told her "[d]on't worry. I won't tell anybody." (Tr. Vol. II, 69.)

{¶ 7} After K.S. finished her story, D.S. immediately called the Reynoldsburg Police Department. At police urging, she drove K.S. to the police station, where Officer Craig Brafford interviewed K.S.

{¶ 8} Officer Brafford testified that K.S. averred she and A.R. were playing with the dolls in the bathtub at A.R.'s house the preceding night. At some point, appellant knocked on the bathroom door and told the girls to hurry up and get out of the bathtub. K.S. wrapped herself in a towel and ran across the hall to A.R.'s bedroom to put on her pajamas. A.R. remained in the bathroom to dry off the dolls. A short time later, while K.S. was still in A.R.'s bedroom, appellant entered the bedroom, approached K.S. from behind, and gave her a hug. As he hugged K.S., appellant pinched her right breast, patted her on the buttocks, and then patted her on the bare buttocks. He then held up his cell phone as if to take a picture with it and motioned for K.S. to drop her towel. K.S. did not drop her towel, and held a straw beach bag in front of her face. K.S. then saw a flash she assumed to have come from appellant's cell phone. Appellant left the bedroom as A.R. entered. K.S. immediately told A.R. what appellant had done.

{¶ 9} Detective Michael Binder also interviewed K.S. According to Detective Binder, K.S. asserted she was at A.R.'s house for a sleepover the preceding night. M.R.

had to leave the house to go to work, so another woman came to babysit the girls. K.S. and A.R. played with their dolls in the bathtub for about 45 minutes. Appellant knocked on the bathroom door and told the girls it was time to get out of the bathtub. A.R. stayed in the bathroom to dry off her dolls. K.S. wrapped herself in a towel and walked across the hall to A.R.'s bedroom to get dressed. Appellant followed her into A.R.'s room, squeezed her breast and pinched her buttocks over the towel, and then lifted the towel and slapped her bare buttocks. Appellant then motioned for K.S. to drop her towel, held up a cell phone as though he were going to take a picture of her, and said he "won't tell nobody." (Tr. Vol. III, 304.) K.S. thought appellant took a picture of her wearing the towel. Appellant eventually left the house, but later sent K.S. several text messages making fun of her boyfriend.

{¶ 10} Officer Brafford subsequently obtained a description of appellant's vehicle and eventually stopped him for committing a traffic violation. At Officer Brafford's request, appellant removed his cell phone and other miscellaneous items from his pockets. Detective Binder arrived at the scene, retrieved appellant's cell phone from Officer Brafford, and informed appellant that he was the subject of certain allegations regarding his conduct the night before. Appellant agreed to go to the police station for an interview with Detective Binder.

{¶ 11} During that interview, which was video recorded and played for the jury, appellant admitted he was at M.R.'s house the night before and told A.R. and K.S. to get out of the bathtub. According to appellant, both girls exited the bathroom at the same time wearing towels and then went into A.R.'s room across the hall. Appellant initially stated that nothing happened between him and K.S.; the two did not even speak to one another. However, after further questioning, appellant stated that he touched K.S. on the small of her back as she entered A.R.'s bedroom. When Detective Binder told appellant he had evidence that appellant had sexual contact with K.S., appellant adamantly denied doing so. Appellant admitted that he pretended to take a picture of K.S. while she was wearing the towel, but stated that he did not actually take a picture. Appellant also admitted he later sent text messages to K.S. about her boyfriend. Near the end of the interview, appellant denied touching K.S. on the buttocks over her towel, but stated that if he had done so, it was accidental and he was sorry about it. Appellant insisted he did not hug K.S. or touch her breast or bare buttocks. Following the interview, appellant agreed to return to the police station the next day for an interview with Detective Tim Doersam.

{¶ 12} In that interview, which was also video recorded and played for the jury, appellant initially stated he touched K.S. on the small of her back as he was guiding her and A.R. toward A.R.'s bedroom after the girls exited the bathroom. He denied following K.S. into A.R.'s bedroom, giving her a hug, or touching her on the buttocks, either over or under the towel. He admitted he pretended to take a picture of K.S. while she was wearing the towel, but stated he never intended to take a picture and did not do so. Later during the interview, appellant stated that he may have accidentally tapped K.S.'s bare buttocks when he steered K.S. and A.R. into A.R.'s bedroom. He also conceded he walked into A.R.'s room, gave K.S. a side hug, and probably touched K.S.'s breast accidentally while doing so. He further stated he apologized to K.S. for touching her breast. Appellant consistently denied motioning to K.S. to drop her towel, telling her not to worry because he would not tell anyone about him taking a picture, or intentionally touching K.S.'s breast or buttocks.

{¶ 13} Detective Binder obtained a search warrant for appellant's cell phone and enlisted another detective to perform a forensic analysis of the phone. That forensic analysis ultimately revealed no photograph of K.S.

{¶ 14} At trial, A.R. testified that on the night in question, appellant and his friend, J.V., stopped by the house to drop off some model rockets. At the time, she and K.S. were playing with dolls in the bathtub. Appellant knocked on the bathroom door and told the girls to get out of the bathtub. Both girls wrapped themselves in towels; K.S. walked across the hall to A.R.'s bedroom while A.R. remained in the bathroom to clean up the dolls and drain the bathtub. When A.R. exited the bathroom, appellant was standing in the hallway outside the bathroom. Appellant hugged and kissed A.R. and left. After appellant left, A.R. went into her bedroom, where she spoke to K.S. According to A.R., K.S. "was sort of shocked and upset" and said appellant had "touched her" on her breast and her bottom. (Tr. Vol. II, 229.)

{¶ 15} Appellant testified on his own behalf. According to appellant, when he and his friend, J.V., arrived at M.R.'s house, he put two model rockets on the kitchen table. K.S. and A.R. were in the bathroom taking a bath. At the babysitter's request, he told the girls to get out of the bathtub. A.R. exited the bathroom, and appellant took her into the kitchen to show her the rockets. A.R. then returned to the bathroom while appellant waited outside in the hallway. Appellant knocked on the bathroom door again and told the girls to get out of the bathtub. K.S. exited first; A.R. walked behind appellant and gave him a hug. Because both girls were wearing only towels, appellant hurried them across the hall into A.R.'s bedroom so J.V. would not see them. In doing so, appellant touched K.S.'s lower back over the towel; he did not touch her under the towel. A.R. said she left one of her toys in the bathroom and went back to retrieve it. Appellant remained in the hallway; A.R. eventually exited the bathroom, went into her bedroom, and closed the door. Appellant and J.V. then left. Appellant denied entering the bedroom with K.S. or taking a picture of K.S. with his cell phone.

{¶ 16} Appellant returned to M.R.'s house the next day. After he left that evening, he was stopped by a patrol officer and told a detective wanted to question him about his conduct the previous night. He voluntarily drove to the police station, where Detective Binder informed him K.S. had alleged he touched her inappropriately. Appellant agreed to an interview, and he told Detective Binder his version of the events. Appellant testified he was "scared" during the interview, but attempted to truthfully answer the detective's questions. (Tr. Vol. IV, 637.) Appellant averred that despite Detective Binder's repeated insistence that appellant took a cell phone picture of K.S. and touched K.S.'s breast and bare buttocks, appellant consistently denied doing so. However, appellant ultimately told Detective Binder that if he did touch K.S.'s breast and buttocks while he was ushering her into A.R.'s bedroom, it was accidental and he was sorry about it. He testified he made these statements only after being "badgered and badgered" by the detective. (Tr. Vol. IV, 645.)

{¶ 17} Appellant further testified he returned to the police station for a second interview on April 15, 2013, during which Detective Doersam repeatedly asked him if he touched K.S.'s breast or bare buttocks. Initially, appellant denied doing so; however, because the detective was "pushing and pushing and pushing" and appellant was "scared" and "under a lot of pressure," he ultimately stated that if he did touch K.S.'s breast or bare buttocks, he was sorry for doing so. (Tr. Vol. IV, 653-54.)

{¶ 18} Appellant acknowledged sending K.S. several text messages about her boyfriend after he left M.R.'s house on April 13, 2013. He also testified he was "absolutely certain" that even if he did touch K.S. on the breast or buttocks, either over or under the towel, he did not do so for the purpose of sexual gratification. (Tr. Vol. V, 693.)

{¶ 19} In his first assignment of error, appellant contends the trial court erred in admitting hearsay testimony from D.S., Officer Brafford, and A.R. relating what K.S. told them about appellant's sexual misconduct. Appellant argues this testimony violated both the Ohio Rules of Evidence and his constitutional rights under the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution to confront the witnesses presented against him at trial.

{¶ 20} A trial court has broad discretion in the admission of evidence and its evidentiary rulings in this regard will not be reversed absent an abuse of that discretion. State v. Jordan, 10th Dist. No. 06AP-96, 2006-Ohio-6224, ¶ 19. "The term 'abuse of discretion' connotes more than a mere error of law or judgment; it implies that the trial court's attitude was unreasonable, arbitrary or unconscionable." Id., citing Blakemore v. Blakemore, 5 Ohio St.3d 217, 219 (1983).

{¶ 21} The Ohio Rules of Evidence define hearsay as "a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted." Evid.R. 801(C). Thus, "[t]o be hearsay, testimony must meet a two-prong test: it must concern an out-of-court statement, and it must be offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted. * * * If either element is not present, the statement is not hearsay." State v. Menefee, 10th Dist. No. 95APA03-266 (Sept. 29, 1995), citing State v. Maurer, 15 Ohio St.3d 239, 262 (1984). "Pursuant to Evid.R. 802, hearsay is inadmissible unless it falls within an exception provided by the rules of evidence." State v. L.E.F., 10th Dist. No. 13AP-1042, 2014-Ohio-4585, ¶ 5.

{¶ 22} Appellant contends the testimony of D.S., Officer Brafford and A.R. "fall[s] squarely with the definition of hearsay," and that no relevant exception applies. (Appellant's Brief, 11.) Appellant specifically argues none of the testimony is "justified as being offered to explain a mother[']s or officer's or friend's actions following the statement." (Appellant's Brief, 11.) Appellant maintains "the only reason to introduce [K.S.]'s substantive statement was to bolster her credibility and prove that her version of events is what did, in fact, occur." (Appellant's Brief, 11.) Accordingly, argues appellant, the testimony should have been excluded. Appellant further contends the remaining evidence offered in support of appellant's conviction was not so overwhelming as to render harmless the trial court's failure to exclude the challenged testimony.

{¶ 23} We first address D.S.'s testimony recounting what K.S. said about appellant's sexual misconduct. At trial, appellant raised only a general hearsay objection to D.S.'s testimony, and the trial court overruled the objection without explaining its basis for doing so.

{¶ 24} The state asserts D.S.'s testimony was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, that is, to show appellant engaged in sexual conduct with K.S. Rather, argues the state, D.S.'s testimony was offered only to explain her subsequent actions in contacting the police.

{¶ 25} "Out-of-court statements offered for reasons other than the truth are not hearsay." State v. Willis, 8th Dist. No. 97077, 2012-Ohio-2623, ¶ 11, citing State v. Freeman, 8th Dist. No. 85137, 2005-Ohio-3480, ¶ 40, citing State v. Lewis, 22 Ohio St.2d 125, 132-33 (1970). For example, "[b]ecause testimony offered to explain a witness' actions is not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, such testimony is not hearsay." Menefee, citing State v. Congeni, 3 Ohio App.3d 392, 398 (8th Dist.1981). " '[E]xtrajudicial statements made by an out-of-court declarant are properly admissible to explain the actions of a witness to whom the statement was directed.' " Id., quoting State v. Thomas, 61 Ohio St.2d 223, 232 (1980).

{¶ 26} D.S.'s testimony was not offered solely to explain how she proceeded with the information provided by K.S. Her testimony exceeded that which was necessary to establish a foundation for her subsequent conduct in contacting the police. To establish such a foundation, D.S. needed only to aver that K.S. reported that appellant had done something of a sexual nature to K.S. that upset or disturbed her. Instead, D.S. provided a detailed recitation of K.S.'s statements which included the elements of the crime of gross sexual imposition, that is, that appellant touched K.S.'s breast and buttocks. Accordingly, we do not agree with the state's argument that D.S.'s testimony was not hearsay.

{¶ 27} However, we do agree with the state's alternative contention that even if D.S.'s testimony did constitute hearsay, it was admissible as an excited utterance pursuant to Evid.R. 803(2). The excited utterance exception allows for the admission of hearsay testimony if (1) the declarant's statement relates to a startling event or condition, and (2) the declarant makes the statement while under the stress or excitement caused by the event or condition. Evid.R. 803(2). "The excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule exists because excited utterances are the product of reactive rather than reflective thinking and, thus, are believed inherently reliable." State v. Ducey, 10th Dist. No. 03AP-944, 2004-Ohio-3833, ¶ 17, citing State v. Taylor, 66 Ohio St.3d 295, 300 (1993).

{¶ 28} A declarant's statement need not be made within a certain time after the startling event in order to qualify as an excited utterance. Id. at ¶ 22, citing Taylor at 303. "There is no per se amount of time after which a statement can no longer be considered to be an excited utterance. The central requirements are that the statement must be made while the declarant is still under the stress of the event and the statement may not be a result of reflective thought. Therefore, the passage of time between the statement and the event is relevant but not dispositive of the question." (Emphasis sic.) Id., quoting Taylor at 303. " 'Relevant factors in ascertaining whether the declarant was in a sufficient state of excitement or stress include outward indicia of emotional state such as tone of voice, accompanying actions, and general demeanor.' " Ducey at ¶ 22, quoting Osborne v. Kroger Co., 10th Dist. No. 02AP-1422, 2003-Ohio-4368, ¶ 46.

{¶ 29} In State v. Fox, 66 Ohio App.3d 481 (6th Dist.1990), an eight-year-old victim of sexual abuse reported the abuse to a social worker one day after the abuse occurred. The trial court admitted the social worker's trial testimony relating the child's statements under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. On appeal, the defendant argued the child's statements could not be termed excited utterances because of the one-day time lapse between the startling event (the abuse) and the out-of-court declaration (the reporting of the abuse to the social worker). The appellate court concurred in the admission of the testimony, stating, at 489:

"Lapse of time between the startling event and the out-of-court statement is not dispositive in the application of Evid.R. 803(2). Rather, the question is whether the declarant is still under the stress of nervous excitement from the event." State v. Boston (1989), 46 Ohio St.3d 108, 118, 545 N.E.2d 1220, 1230-1231, citing State v. Duncan (1978), 53 Ohio St.2d 215, 219-222, 7 O.O.3d 380, 382-384, 373 N.E.2d 1234, 1236-1238. * * * As applied to the statements of child declarants who have been sexually assaulted, the admissibility of these statements depends upon the unique circumstances of each case. The focus is not on a specific time frame but upon whether the excitement of the assault is still dominant over the child declarant's thought processes and whether the child's statements were unreflective expressions of her belief.

The record of the case before us reveals that approximately one day lapsed between the alleged sexual assault on August 2, 1988, and [the child's] interview with [the social worker]. The incident itself was of a shocking nature, and the child was described as distraught and tearful during this portion of the interview. Taking these facts into consideration, it is reasonable to find that [the child] was still in a state of excitement at the time of her statement to [the social worker].

{¶ 30} The court in State v. Mader, 8th Dist. No. 78200 (Aug. 30, 2001), held similarly. There, a 13-year-old victim of sexual abuse reported the abuse to her mother, her school counselor, and the police two to three days after the abuse occurred. The trial court admitted the testimony of these witnesses under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. The appellate court concluded it was within the trial court's discretion to find the child was still under the stress of the event when she made the statements to the adults. In so concluding, the court observed, "[a] child is likely to remain in a state of nervous excitement longer than an adult. * * * A child also has less ability to reflect upon events, so their statements are less likely to be the result of reflective thought. * * * A child could still be under the stress of the incident days or weeks after the event." Id., citing the dissent in State v. Kebe, 8th Dist. No. 73398 (Nov. 12, 1998). The court also noted the child was "hysterical and crying" when she reported the abuse and was only 13 years old at the time of the incident. Id. See also State v. Wright, 6th Dist. No. L-12-1327, 2013-Ohio-5910, ¶ 18 (test for excited utterance applied liberally to out-of-court statements made by child declarants alleged to have been sexually assaulted).

{¶ 31} In the present case, K.S. reported appellant's sexual misconduct to D.S. less than 24 hours after it occurred and less than 8 hours after she returned home. D.S. testified K.S. had an "apprehensi[ve] * * * upsetting, anxious tone in [her] voice" when reporting the incident. (Tr. Vol. II, 66.) D.S. testified she was not surprised K.S. waited until the next evening to tell her what had happened. According to D.S., K.S. said "she tried to tell me twice, and she thought she was going to throw up. She was upset about it. She was not in the wrong. But the thought of it made her sick." (Tr. Vol. II, 70.) Further, K.S. was only 11 years old at the time of the incident. In accordance with Fox and Mader, we conclude K.S.'s statements to D.S. qualified as an excited utterance because the statements related to the startling event of being sexually assaulted by appellant and were made while K.S. was still under the stress of that event. Accordingly, the trial court did not err in admitting D.S.'s testimony.

{¶ 32} We next address Officer Brafford's testimony relating K.S.'s statements about appellant's inappropriate sexual conduct. Appellant again raised only a general hearsay objection to the testimony, and the trial court again summarily overruled the objection.

{¶ 33} The state asserts Officer Brafford's testimony did not constitute hearsay because it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, that is, to show the sexual conduct occurred. Rather, argues the state, K.S.'s statements to Officer Brafford were offered only to explain his subsequent conduct in investigating the crime.

{¶ 34} Generally, a police officer is permitted to testify as to the underlying reasons for his conduct in investigating a crime, and such statements are, by definition, not hearsay. State v. Blanton, 184 Ohio App.3d 611, 2009-Ohio-5334, ¶ 38 (10th Dist.), citing State v. Blevins, 36 Ohio App.3d 147, 149 (10th Dist.1987), citing Thomas at 232. In Blevins, this court set forth the test for the admissibility of such testimony: "[t]he conduct to be explained should be relevant, equivocal and contemporaneous with the statements. * * * Additionally, such statements must meet the standard of Evid.R. 403(A)." Id. A trial court must exercise caution when determining the admissibility of an out-of-court declarant's statements to explain a police officer's conduct because "the potential for abuse in admitting such statements is great." Id. Further, " 'when the statements connect the accused with the crime charged, they should generally be excluded.' " Blanton at ¶ 39, quoting State v. Humphrey, 10th Dist. No. 07AP-837, 2008-Ohio-6302, ¶ 11.

{¶ 35} "[W]hen an officer relates out-of-court statements that establish the elements of the crime charged, the statements may exceed that which is needed to establish a foundation for the officer's subsequent conduct." Willis at ¶ 12, citing State v. Gresh, 5th Dist. No. 09-CAA-012-0102, 2010-Ohio-5814, ¶ 31. In Gresh, a police officer testified to the victim's statements that the defendant touched her inappropriately. The trial court admitted the testimony on the ground it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but to explain the officer's investigative steps. On appeal, the court determined the testimony was improperly admitted because the officer's statements went beyond what was necessary to establish a foundation for the officer's subsequent conduct and the statements established the elements of the crime for which the defendant was charged. Id.

{¶ 36} In the present case, Officer Brafford's narration was not limited to a brief explanation of the basis for police involvement. Indeed, why Officer Brafford proceeded as he did had very little, if any, relevance or real importance in this case. Officer Brafford's testimony had real meaning and impact only if it was offered to prove the truth of what it asserts, which is that appellant sexually assaulted K.S. To that end, Officer Brafford's testimony clearly demonstrated the elements of the crimes with which appellant was charged. Indeed, Officer Brafford testified that K.S. reported to him that appellant touched her breast and buttocks. Accordingly, we disagree with the state's assertion that Officer Brafford's testimony was not hearsay. The state does not alternatively contend that even if Officer Brafford's testimony did constitute hearsay, it was admissible under one of the exceptions set forth in Evid.R. 803.

{¶ 37} Our conclusion that Officer Brafford's hearsay testimony was improperly admitted does not end our inquiry. This court has stated that " 'hearsay is generally inadmissible because the declarant is not testifying in court and the factfinder is unable to observe the declarant and decide whether the declarant's statement is worthy of belief.' " State v. Bartolomeo, 10th Dist. No. 08AP-969, 2009-Ohio-3086, ¶ 17, quoting State v. Warren, 8th Dist. No. 83823, 2004-Ohio-5599, ¶ 44. In addition, "[t]he admission of hearsay is harmless error where the declarant was also a witness and examined regarding matters identical to those contained in the hearsay statements." State v. Smith, 2d Dist. No. 20828, 2006-Ohio-45, ¶ 16, citing State v. Allen, 2d Dist. No. 1390 (May 24, 1996). See also State v. Hubbard, 12th Dist. No. CA2006-09-216, 2007-Ohio-6029, ¶ 14 (police detective's recitation of victim's statements to police did not prejudicially bolster victim's credibility because victim testified at trial and victim and detective were subject to cross-examination); Gresh (finding admission of police officer's hearsay testimony relating child victim's statement that defendant sexually abused her harmless because the victim testified at trial as to how and where the defendant touched her). Here, K.S. (the declarant) testified at trial, and her testimony, which during direct examination was to the same effect as Officer Brafford's testimony, was subject to cross-examination. See Bartolomeo at ¶ 17. Accordingly, any error in the admission of Officer Brafford's hearsay testimony was harmless.

{¶ 38} Lastly, we consider A.R.'s testimony describing what K.S. told her about appellant's sexual misconduct. Again, appellant raised only a general hearsay objection to the testimony, and the trial court overruled the objection without explanation.

{¶ 39} The state does not dispute A.R.'s testimony was hearsay. However, the state argues the testimony was admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. We agree. As noted above, the excited utterance exception permits the admission of hearsay testimony if the declarant's statement relates to a startling event and is made under the stress of that event. Immediately after A.R. entered her bedroom, which was within moments of appellant leaving the room, K.S. told her appellant had touched her breast and buttocks. K.S.'s statement to A.R. qualified as an excited utterance because it related to the startling event of appellant's sexual misconduct and was made under the stress of that event. Accordingly, the trial court did not err in admitting A.R.'s testimony.

{¶ 40} Appellant contends for the first time on appeal the admission of K.S.'s statements through the above noted testimony violated his Sixth Amendment right to confront the witnesses against him. In Jordan, this court addressed a Sixth Amendment claim similar to that presented here. There, a social worker interviewed a child victim of sexual abuse as part of the intake process at a hospital. At trial, the social worker recounted the child's description of the abuse. On appeal, the defendant argued for the first time the admission of the child's out-of-court statements through the social worker's testimony violated his Sixth Amendment right to confront the witnesses against him. This court found no plain error in the admission of the testimony. We explained, at ¶ 23-25:

Under Crawford v. Washington (2004), 541 U.S. 36, regardless of its admissibility under the rules of evidence, a testimonial, out-of-court statement offered against an accused to establish the truth of the matter asserted may only be admitted when the declarant is unavailable and where the accused has a prior opportunity to cross-examine the witness.

Crawford further states that "when the declarant appears for cross-examination at trial, the Confrontation Clause places no constraints at all on the use of his prior testimonial statements." Id. at 59, fn. 9, citing California v. Green (1970), 399 U.S. 149, 162.

Although [defendant] ultimately chose not to fully cross-examine [the child] at trial on the subject of these prior, out-of-court statements to [the social worker], she did testify, and [defendant] had the opportunity for effective cross-examination. Because the Confrontation Clause guarantees only an opportunity for cross-examination, the fact that a defendant has chosen not to avail himself of the opportunity does not violate the Confrontation Clause. United States v. Owens (1988), 484 U.S. 554, 559.

(Emphasis sic.)

{¶ 41} As in Jordan, K.S. (the declarant) testified at trial and appellant was provided the opportunity to cross-examine her on the subject of her prior statements to D.S., Officer Brafford, and A.R. Accordingly, we conclude appellant's Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses against him at trial was not violated under the Crawford standard because appellant had a full opportunity to cross-examine the declarant who testified at trial. Crawford v. Washington (2004), 541 U.S. 36. Jordan at ¶ 25. See also L.E.F. at ¶ 11 ("because [the declarant] testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination, we are not presented with a Confrontation Clause issue"); State v. McKinney, 10th Dist. No. 13AP-211, 2013-Ohio-5394, ¶ 21. Appellant's first assignment of error is overruled.

{¶ 42} In his second assignment of error, appellant contends the trial court erred in permitting the prosecutor to elicit victim impact evidence at trial. Appellant specifically asserts the trial court erred in allowing D.S. to testify about the "psychological harm" appellant's conduct caused K.S. and her family. (Appellant's Brief, 14.)

{¶ 43} When the prosecutor asked D.S. what impact the April 13, 2013 incident had on her family, D.S. responded, "[a] lot of conversations that I have had to have with my children." (Tr. Vol. II, 77.) Appellant objected "to this line of questioning" on relevancy grounds. (Tr. Vol. II, 77.) The trial court summarily overruled the objection, and D.S. continued her testimony, stating, "there has been a lot of tears, not apprehension, a lot of uneasiness in the neighborhood. * * * We've had to have conversations with my son about why we are careful[.] * * * I had to have the same conversation with him from having spent the night down there before." (Tr. Vol. II, 77-78.) Appellant lodged the "[s]ame objection," which the trial court again summarily overruled. (Tr. Vol. II, 78.)

{¶ 44} Appellant maintains the challenged testimony was irrelevant and prejudicial in that it "offered a narrative of lost innocence and a neighborhood and friendship's [sic] shattered without any concern as to whether those results were relevant to [appellant's] guilt" and was "only designed to foster sympathy for K.S.'s family." (Appellant's Brief, 15-16.) The state argues the testimony was relevant to prove the offenses occurred and to corroborate K.S.'s testimony.

{¶ 45} Generally, any evidence having the "tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence" is admissible. See Evid.R. 401. However, testimony as to the effect a defendant's criminal acts have on the victim, the victim's family, or both, is usually irrelevant because it does not ordinarily involve the guilt or innocence of the accused. State v. Wade, 8th Dist. No. 90145, 2008-Ohio-4870, ¶ 17. "Rather than proving any fact of consequence on the issue of guilt, victim impact testimony tends to inflame the passions of the jury and risk conviction on facts unrelated to actual guilt." Id., citing State v. White, 15 Ohio St.2d 146 (1968). However, "[v]ictim-impact evidence is admissible in certain circumstances, such as when the evidence relates to both the facts attendant to the offense and the effect on the victim." State v. Rucker, 2d Dist. No. 24340, 2012-Ohio-4860, ¶ 34, citing State v. Hunter, 131 Ohio St.3d 67, 2011-Ohio-6524, ¶ 138.

{¶ 46} In the present case, the prosecutor's question regarding the effect appellant's conduct had on K.S. and her family was not relevant to appellant's guilt or innocence, and the only apparent purpose for the question was to elicit sympathy from the jury. The trial court thus erred in admitting the testimony. However, we find the admission of this evidence amounted to harmless error. Where there is no reasonable possibility the challenged testimony contributed to a conviction, the error is harmless and thus does not constitute grounds for reversal. State v. Haines, 112 Ohio St.3d 393, 2006-Ohio-6711, ¶ 62.

{¶ 47} The prosecutor did not dwell on the impact of the crimes on K.S. and her family, either during questioning or in closing argument. See Rucker at ¶ 34. In addition, appellant raises no challenge to either the weight or sufficiency of the evidence. See Wade at ¶ 20. K.S. testified in detail regarding the sexual abuse, and the persons to whom she reported the abuse offered testimony consistent with that of K.S. In addition, during his interviews with the police and at trial, appellant ultimately conceded he was in A.R.'s bedroom with K.S., that if he touched K.S.'s breast when he hugged her, it was accidental, and that he may have accidentally touched her buttocks while ushering her into A.R.'s bedroom. After assessing the evidence presented by both parties at trial, including the credibility of all witnesses, including appellant, the jury found appellant guilty of two counts of gross sexual imposition.

{¶ 48} Contrary to appellant's assertion, the victim impact testimony in this case was not similar to that admitted in State v. Ponce, 10th Dist. No. 95APA11-1450 (Oct. 10, 1996), and State v. Presley, 10th Dist. No. 02AP-1354, 2003-Ohio-6069. In Ponce, a rape victim testified she sought psychological counseling for emotional problems and nightmares stemming from the rape. In Presley, a rape victim testified she had nightmares about the rape and both the victim and her mother testified the victim attempted suicide as a result of the rape. In both cases, this court concluded the improper admission of the testimony prejudiced the defendant. Here, D.S. did not testify that K.S. sought psychological counseling or attempted suicide as the result of appellant's conduct. In fact, D.S. offered no specifics about the impact of appellant's conduct on K.S. Rather, D.S. offered only general testimony about "tears" and "uneasiness in the neighborhood" and that she had to talk about the incident with her son. Given the overall context of the trial, there is no reasonable possibility that the limited victim impact testimony contributed to appellant's conviction. The second assignment of error is overruled.

{¶ 49} In his third assignment of error, appellant contends the cumulative effect of the trial court's errors in admitting hearsay and victim impact testimony deprived him of a fair trial and requires a reversal of his conviction.

{¶ 50} "Under the doctrine of accumulated error, a conviction will be reversed when the cumulative effect of errors in a trial deprives a defendant of a fair trial even though each of the instances of trial-court error does not individually constitute cause for reversal." State v. Pickens, 141 Ohio St.3d 462, 2014-Ohio-5445, ¶ 230, citing State v. DeMarco, 31 Ohio St.3d 191 (1987), paragraph two of the syllabus; State v. Kirkland, 140 Ohio St.3d 73, 2014-Ohio-1966, ¶ 140. "Errors which are separately harmless can, when considered together, violate an accused's right to a fair trial." State v. Norman, 10th Dist. No. 12AP-505, 2013-Ohio-1908, ¶ 61, citing State v. Madrigal, 87 Ohio St.3d 378, 397 (2000). However, " 'errors cannot become prejudicial by sheer weight of numbers.' " State v. Were, 118 Ohio St.3d 448, 2008-Ohio-2762, ¶ 261, quoting State v. Hill, 75 Ohio St.3d 195, 212 (1996).

{¶ 51} Although this court concluded the trial court erred in admitting Officer Brafford's hearsay testimony and D.S.'s victim impact testimony, we found those evidentiary errors to be harmless. These two harmless errors, even taken together, did not deprive appellant of a fair trial given the strength of the other evidence of guilt. In short, appellant has not demonstrated the cumulative effect of these two instances of harmless error deprived him of a fair trial. See State v. Banks, 10th Dist. No. 03AP-1286, 2005-Ohio-1943, ¶ 23; State v. Jennings, 10th Dist. No. 00AP-1283 (Sept. 13, 2001); State v. Blackmon, 10th Dist. No. 94APA05-773 (Feb. 14 1995). The third assignment of error is overruled.

{¶ 52} Having overruled appellant's three assignment of error, we affirm the judgment of the Franklin County Court of Common Pleas.

Judgment affirmed.
